

BIOGRAPHY

For more than 15 years, Paul Bellows has worked with thousands of bold, driven, and compassionate business leaders to help them achieve their mission and do more good in their communities and around the planet.

He is the founder and CEO of a thriving advisory firm known as “Be Good at Doing Good” where his passion is coaching entrepreneurs, CEOs and professionals to help them grow their organization, create sustainable business models, and give back in big ways. He specializes in strategic planning, organizational restructuring, leadership development, culture building, green strategies and exit planning. He also facilitates mastermind groups, planning retreats, and presents powerful, practical, and inspirational motivational speeches to all types of companies, non-profits, and associations around the globe.

Paul owned his first business - a BBQ restaurant - in the 1980's while he was attending the University of Arizona. In the 1990's, Paul spent 5 years as VP of Asian Operations for GlobeTech International where he grew revenue by more than 1,000%. In 1999 Paul purchased his own high-tech manufacturing company, which he built into a global leader and sold in 2005.

Paul's book and proprietary coaching process - “Be Good at Doing Good!: Your Business Coach in a Book” - will be released in August of 2020. Paul has a Master's degree in Asian Studies from the University of San Francisco and loves to spend time sailing with his family.
